P.S.

Prior to the adventure to Aberaeron occurred the invention of 'carpark toast'. Carpark toast enables you to enjoy a peanut toast-topping where peanut butter is not available, as is often the case in places that will sell you single pieces of standard toast, such as W.spoons in Aberystwyth. You will need to buy a pack of peanuts and you will not need to use all of them to assemble a carpark toast creation, but you will then have some peanuts left over for later which can be quite helpful. Carpark toast is: toast with butter and jam, topped with peanuts lined up on top as in a carpark. The carpark might be reminiscent of various carpark-types, for example the outdoor-cinema carpark, the multi-story shopping centre carpark, the inner-city hotel carpark with any adjacent church. Carpark toast starts from a basis of toast & butter & jam & peanuts, but can have variations, guided by intuition. The cars do not have to be peanuts, but cannot be anything.

Books on the European and red-coloured Castle Hotel Aberaeron were Prototype 5 (in hot pink) with congratulations to Clare Carroll who writes on André Breton and hair-dye, and The Politics and Poetics of Everyday Life (in hot lilac) by Kristin Ross.

Surely the green squares in the Gardens of Llanerchaeron are extremely nice, and always under a yellow sun. ELVIS is scrawled on a stone nearby.
