

December 31, 2023

Last Letter for a Little While

by Amy Grandvoinet

Sunday 31st December 2023

Dearest friends,

As of 29th February 2024, TinyLetter will be discontinuing, so this might be the last letter for a little while. You can get a 1-month free trial with a new letter platform, but it doesn't seem as good. 'Going About, Baby' might go elsewhere at some point, but I'm not sure where that else might be right now. In the meantime, * tysm * for reading these tiny - letters. I haved loved writing them.

Pictured is a Lego, no Duplo, xmas tree on a Real Xmas Tree opposite the Post Office in my mom's & dad's town on the southern-most tip of the Isle of Wight, where you can get French-time on your phone occasionally if there is any signal at all. The

Subscribe

Archive

the Post Office nearby it all year round.

Typing on a laptop sounds like 'mice nibbling things' says mom, adorably. Dad remarks the mice too. Later, we might see rescued ponies and donkeys, come rain or shine.

What will people nibble on in the celebration of a starting New Year? I read Lud Heat, and I. Sinclair speaks of 'scampi risks' (Lud Heat, p. 96). I read PLACE, and A. Fisher speaks of 'rattling apples' (PLACE, p. 86). Please bring Peace on Earth.

All my truest love & very best wishes,
Amy Grandvoinet x